This course spans nine days of focused and quality Permaculture lectures, demonstration and hands-on field work activity. Participants will experience a variety of urban and broad-acre farm sites currently practicing principles of ecological agriculture and sustainable architecture. Three accomplished Permaculture teachers will combine their talents and years of teaching experience, working with the ecology of the central plains bioregion.

Urban gardeners, beginning farmers, and landscapers interested in living and working in a sustainable way will gain greatly from this course. It is for those who desire to restore the landscape and bring our communities and green spaces back to their natural ecological balance. You will learn about the Permaculture methods of perennial food production, ecological landscape design, and energy efficient systems.
